Now, thinking about something slightly different...

Q13 As President Obama prepares to deliver his State of the Union address, there are many important issues facing the country. I'm going to list some of these issues. Recognizing that all these issues may be important but that not every single one can be a top priority for the President and Congress, for each one please tell me whether you think it should be an absolute priority for the Obama administration and THIS year's Congress, it is something that can be delayed until next year, or something that you think the Obama administration and Congress should not pursue. The (first/next) one is...(RANDOMIZE)

And, switching topics...

Q23 As you may know, in November President Obama signed an executive action on immigration because of his concerns that Congress had not passed legislation on this issue. The president's executive action granted temporary legal status and removed the threat of deportation for an estimated four million foreigners staying illegally in the United States who have been in the country more than five years, have no criminal record, and are parents. Do you approve or disapprove of the president's executive action? (IF DISAPPROVE THEN ASK) Now, would you say you disapprove more because you believe the president should not have acted without the approval of Congress or more because you oppose the president's immigration policy?

Q26 Which of the following comes closer to your point of view about American media and entertainment outlets releasing materials, including words, images, and video that might be considered offensive to some groups or countries? Would you say American media and entertainment outlets...(ROTATE)

SHOULD voluntarily limit releasing potentially offensive materials so that the lives of Americans and our national security are not put in danger by groups or countries that take violent or harmful action against us in response

...OR...

Should NOT voluntarily limit releasing potentially offensive materials because we should not allow threats by groups or countries to limit freedom of expression which is a central principle of our democracy
